

LISA M. GREEN

AUTHOR BIO

Lisa M. Green is a high school English and Special Education teacher with a degree in Secondary English Education from Kennesaw State University. Born in Atlanta, Georgia, in 1978, she began writing at a very young age and even considered a career in screenwriting or journalism. Throughout her childhood, she drove everyone insane with her constant stories and plays. Friends and family were forced to watch—and often take part in—a plethora of theatrical performances. This passion for writing won her the very notable and prestigious Fourth Grade Writing Award in elementary school; she was very proud.

As a true lover of the English language, Ms. Green has always enjoyed reading. When she was young, her parents would encourage her to go outside because she spent so much time inside reading books. To appease them, her compromise often consisted of taking her beloved book with her to read as she nestled into the crook of a nearby tree. The genres she enjoys the most are fantasy, science fiction, and young adult.

She enjoys educating high school students about writing as well as literature. Currently, Lisa Green lives in the metro Atlanta area with her husband and daughter. Her favorite place to be (other than asleep in bed) is the beach. She also enjoys reading, cooking, traveling, hiking, and playing video games that girls aren't supposed to like.
